GREETINGS

April 11, 2021
Indiana University Bloomington Honors Convocation

Dear Friends,

I am delighted to welcome you to the Honors Convocation, an annual celebration of academic achievement. Today, we honor our Founders Scholars and other accomplished undergraduates.

Indiana University has experienced tremendous growth since its founding more than 200 years ago. Along the way, our institution has developed an impressive legacy of teaching and learning. The students we recognize today are part of that legacy. They have demonstrated intellectual curiosity, discipline, and engagement. They view serious study as a welcome challenge, and they are enthusiastic scholars whose current achievements suggest a bright future for them and all of us.

On behalf of Indiana University Bloomington, we offer heartfelt congratulations to our honor students for their remarkable accomplishments.

Z
In 1824 the Indiana Seminary opened its doors as an outpost of higher education in the frontier. Four years later it became a college, and the trustees elected their first president, Andrew Wylie. Then 39 years old, Wylie had already made a name for himself as a scholar, educator, and leader. The son of an Irish farmer, Wylie graduated from Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1810 at the age of 20, continued at Jefferson as a tutor, and was unanimously elected president of that institution two years later. In 1817 he resigned the presidency there to accept the presidency of neighboring Washington College. His plan to unite the two schools, however, was ahead of its time—not until 1865 did they merge to become Washington and Jefferson College.

Perhaps the discord engendered by the failed merger inclined Wylie to a sympathetic reading of David Maxwell’s letter of May 7, 1828, informing him of his election to the presidency of Indiana College.

With his wife, Margaret, and nine children, Wylie moved to Bloomington and assumed his new duties in October 1829, joining a faculty of two and a student body of 40. Here, in addition to his administrative responsibilities, Wylie instructed the seniors in literature, philosophy and ethics, and political economy. Matthew Elder, an 1840 graduate, later recalled that his senior professor . . . was stout, had a fine healthful appearance, slightly tinged, however, with sadness which only disappeared entirely when in a mirthful mood he became a boy again. He was very intellectual, his mental faculties naturally strong being developed into powers by long and careful study. He was thoroughly conversant with all the metaphysical theories that had agitated the world, was one of the finest Belles Lettres scholars, read Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, and German as fluently as he did his native language, and he was one of the best readers of English I ever heard. When he walked the streets he appeared abstracted, never shaking hands nor conversing with any one, a nod of recognition being invariably his habit.

In this way I became very familiar with Dr. Wylie and learned that instead of being distant and stern he was remarkably social and as tenderhearted as a child. He and [his cousin] Professor [Theophilus] Wylie visited me when I was sick, walking a mile when they did so.

In 1835 Wylie moved his growing family (now 11 children, and one more on the way) from a rented house on Morton Street to their newly constructed home, a red brick mansion on East Second Street. Situated on five acres, with an additional large woodlot south of town, the president could again indulge his boyhood love of farming and manual labor. He wrote to his son John, “My health with the labors and cares that are upon me would fail were it not that I sweat at the hoe every day.” Chopping wood was his favorite exercise for strengthening the body and quieting the mind.

Andrew Wylie successfully guided the university through 22 difficult and formative years—through economic crises and partisan political battles, student unrest, and faculty wars. He carried on through personal grief, losing three sons as young adults. Wylie died of pneumonia on November 11, 1851, at the age of 62, still engaged in the work of building the university.

Wylie House Museum recreates the Wylie home of the 1840s. The museum is open for virtual tours. For more information, call Wylie House at 812-855-6224 or visit libraries.indiana.edu/wylie-house-museum.
